The New York Times reported in 2016 that the NSO Group charged customers $500,000 just to install the software and $650,000 to get into 10 devices. The report also said that infiltrating 10 Android devices would cost an agency $650,000 and the same cost would apply for 10 iPhone gadgets. Getting into Blackberry devices would cost an agency $500,000 and $300,000 for Symbian users.

According to the report, extra targets would increase the cost further. Moreover, the company also charged an annual maintenance fee of 17 per cent of the total price.

This comes with the caveat that the price list mentioned is for the previous generation of Pegasus and current versions with greater features and even zero-click capabilities may cost more. Zero-click hacks are those that allow spyware to enter a device without the user having to do anything.
